"Why do I want to be a summer intern? Created Equal seriously changed my life. I can't say that enough. I tell everyone. I wasn't an activist prior to the Justice Ride." - Meg, Justice Rider and soon to be Created Equal intern

While thousands were converging on Washington, DC for the annual March for Life, a storm was brewing. No, I don't mean Blizzard Jonas, which dumped feet of snow on the eastern seaboard and stalled our team at a hotel halfway home after representing abortion victims at the March. Rather, I'm speaking of the legal storm Planned Parenthood was throwing at David Daleiden, the man behind The Center for Medical Progress's undercover videos which shocked the nation and launched #ProtestPP last year.

The day before the March, David joined us at the construction site of a proposed Planned Parenthood mega-center for a national #ProtestPP event. Speakers included Pro-Life Action League's Eric Scheidler, Citizens for a Pro-Life Society's Monica Miller, and others—as well as David and myself.

This was the first time the nationwide #ProtestPP coalition gathered together in one location. We prayed, shared successes, and spoke of exciting new projects I can't wait to share with you!

As David shared with us details of Planned Parenthood's lawsuit against his undercover investigation, I wondered whether the thousands attending the March would have the moral clarity and personal fortitude to stand in his shoes.

Only time will tell, but that is the message we championed via both of our JumboTVs. To advocate for babies means standing in the cold snow in front of an abortion facility. It means holding pictures of the dead children on street corners and hostile campuses. It means sacrifice.

In previous years, we've become known for our JumboTV at the March broadcasting video of abortion victims. But this year, for the first time, we had two massive screens showing the children.

Why is this important? Because the children must be seen at their own March. While we should champion David Daleiden and other whistleblowers like him, the March for Life is principally for those who could become or already are victims of abortion.

They must be heard. And that is why we do what we do.

We had two JumboTV screens at the National March for Life in DC this year! Standing in front of the first screen is Created Equal intern Sarah. She invites thousands of students marching by to join the Justice Rides.

Planned Parenthood isn't the only one trying to shut down pro-life efforts. In Ohio, we reported late last year that abortion advocates had become angered by the success of our Killers Among Us project to the point of trying to create their own law—Ohio's House Bill 408—to stop us.

While we're carefully following their effort to repeal the First Amendment, we've also quietly been at work on something new. Indeed, Killers Among Us was just the beginning. I can't wait to share details with you, but for now all I can say is that our new effort will be called #ProjectWeakLink and pro-aborts are going to hate it!

Why? Because we've found their weak link. The undercover videos last year provided more evidence of the vulnerabilities of the abortion giants. And we're set to target one of the most tenuous flaws in their system. Stay tuned!

Created Equal intern Megan and team face violent threats for sharing with their campus the truth of abortion.

In the meantime, our Justice Riders continue to boldly defend preborn babies and take heat for it. The latest example of this can be seen at Purdue University. Last week, Justice Rider and Created Equal intern Megan Smith led her Purdue Students for Life team in posting fliers around campus educating students of the shocking rate of black babies killed by abortion. Taking their cue from Planned Parenthood, rather than responding to the content of the fliers, abortion advocates ripped them down and then turned to smear the character of the pro-life students—calling them “racist” and other words I’ll refrain from writing. One Purdue staff member even went so far as to post online threats to rape the students! We continue to advise Megan as she and her team work with the authorities.

How did pro-aborts justify responding to these fliers with verbal and physical violence? Because the message was offensive. In a CBS news report, one Purdue student commenting on the fliers says, “It’s really hurtful.”

What the “offended” parties are forgetting, though, is that what matters is not whether a message is pleasing to the ears but whether or not it is true. The vocal minority may stick fingers in their ears and decry the messenger, but that has no bearing on the veracity of the message.

Megan will not back down, and neither will we as we face opposition to current and future projects. We must press on because the victims of abortion deserve nothing less. Indeed, in 2016 THE RESISTANCE stands strong.

For those who can't speak,

Mark
