

"[We] were witness to three young people--two guys and one woman--who were carrying pro-abortion signs. And they got to the point in the March where there were photographs of abortion and the video of an abortion. And the woman stopped dead in her tracks. She started to cry. She put down her sign. And she picked up a pro-life sign." - Mary Anne

The year has just begun, and we've already reached hundreds of thousands of Americans with the truth.

There is no gathering of preborn defenders larger than the National March for Life. For years, we've taken our JumboTron screen to this event to represent abortion victims visually and underscore the urgency of the movement. But this year was the second time we've had two screens—maximizing our ability to reach those in attendance.

Eyes again widened in shock. Hands covered gaping mouths. And at least one story has already surfaced of a pro-abortion protester being moved by the Jumbotron footage to the point of trading her pro-abortion sign for a pro-life one. Praise God!

"Women's March on Washington, DC"

One week before the March for Life, we attended a very different march—one called the "Women's March on Washington, DC." In spite of the generic name, this was a march to defend baby-killing.

The event's website read, "We call on all defenders of human rights to join us." However, this invitation had no room for those who defend preborn babies. While our JumboTV trailer drove around the event, our team entered with signs showing babies and mothers killed by legal abortion. Marchers immediately began chanting their support of abortion. Many stood in front of our signs. Still others shouted or spat in our direction.

But one young girl marching was moved by the contrast between our love and the crowd's hate. She approached our team member Emma, hugged her, and said, "I'm sorry for how we treat you. I'm glad you're here."

Those who defend killing babies should see the victims.

Inauguration of Donald Trump

Our team was also on the ground for the inauguration of President Donald Trump! President Trump made many promises to the babies on the campaign trail, and our purpose was to call on him to keep those commitments. We held a banner reading, "Pres. Trump: Keep your promises to the babies" paired with pictures of his youngest constituents.

After taking the oath, President Trump began the inaugural parade, which took him directly to our team. In his speech, he'd referenced "American carnage" caused by crime. Passing our team, he was reminded of the greatest American carnage and of his duty to protect the babies.

P.S.— At the March for Life, Robert said, "My daughter, Renee, saw this video at the March for Life two years ago when she was 16. As soon as she saw the images, she became pro-life." With your help, we can reach many more like Renee!
